The subscriber, grateful for past favors, offers the Catalogue of plants, trees and shrubs. I confidently assure the public, that the plants I offer for sale, are really of the qualities mentioned; being a practical nurseryman, and superintending the operations in every department, I guarantee the fulfillment of orders in every respect, from the genuineness of the plants to the safe packing of the same; and I trust that by a punctual attention to business, strict adherence to contract, and honorable execution of orders, to secure an increasing portion of that public patronage, of which I already gratefully acknowledge a very liberal share.

 All orders from unknown correspondents, must be accompanied with cash, bills, or responsibility.

 Directions should be written plainly, and mode of transit pointed out.

 Every plant carefully named and properly packed. When purchasers are not familiar with trees or plants, selections will be judiciously made if required.

 My customers are requested to notify me instantly of any errors that may be committed in filling their orders, in order that I may at once make ample amends, as I desire to do a square business.

 All goods at the risk of the purchaser after delivery by me.

For the convenience of purchasers who contemplate planting largely, the following table is given to show the number of trees to an acre, at various distances:

CONIFERÆ.

This class of trees contains a great portion of our most valued timber trees, namely, pine and cedar, and should be planted largely in connection with the Australian gum trees. The Monterey cypress and pine are very rapid, and make excellent timber; these would make good screens on the weather side of plantations, and would greatly facilitate the growth of the plantation. Young trees of the above kinds could be raised in quantities and sold at very reasonable rates by the thousand; our catalogue prices form no criterion as it refers to size and rarity only.

EUCALYPTUS.

This is one of our best acquisitions from Australia, being composed of lofty timber trees, attaining heights from 20 to 500 feet, having great diversity of color in their young growth—yellow, brown, crimson, grey, blue, green, bronze; indeed, so various is the shading in the different species, that planting in groups the different varieties produces the finest effects for landscape purposes. The timber is used in Australia for buildings, for railroad purposes, for cabinet work, and some species are used specially for maritime purposes, as it has been demonstrated that the Torredo and other maritime insects will not attack it. I find, also, from official reports to the British Government, of the rate of growth attained per annum by different leading varieties, that in California the same varieties will give two-thirds more growth than in their native country. As a timber tree, I know of no surer investment; and as the future of California demands tree planting as the only means of bringing an equal rainfall, it is of great importance that we plant, understandingly, the best trees. I have some thirty-five species growing in the nursery; they are of easy culture, requiring no irrigation, and after establishment, say two years, prefer to be let alone. They can be raised in quantities at very low rates, and will be very profitable, if for cord wood alone.
